What is the seminar about?

Whether you are advising (i) a lending institution on the steps available to it in enforcing a loan agreement or (ii) a home-owner struggling to keep up with his/her repayment schedule, this seminar is for you! Unfortunately, debt collection proceedings – and particularly summary and possession proceedings – have grown exponentially in the past few years. Banks are having to bolster their legal teams to ensure compliance with legislation requiring a level of forbearance prior to seeking possession of homes. Insolvency practitioners are contending with the difficult task of advising families in financial distress, threatened with the loss of their homes. This seminar addresses both of those issues. When should banks consider legal proceedings and how should they go about conducting those proceedings? What is the best advice to a borrower in distress? Are there any "loopholes" which may come to a borrower's rescue? How can solicitors and accountants become PIPs and add a new dimension to their practice? As always, we also discuss the latest legislation and jurisprudence concerning mortgage proceedings.

Who should attend?

This seminar will appeal to a range of different people:

- Solicitors.
- Barristers.
- Accountants.
- Other insolvency advisers.
- In-house advisers to financial institutions.
